The Foreign Relations of the United States series presents the official documentary historical record of major U.S. foreign policy decisions and significant diplomatic activity. The series, produced by the State Department's Office of the Historian, is comprised of more than 500 volumes containing invaluable historical information. HeinOnline's image-based, fully searchable, and easy-to-use interface provides an excellent platform to access exact replicas of the print volumes without using valuable shelf space in your library.

The series began in 1861 during Abraham Lincoln's administration, under the title of Papers Relating to the Foreign Relations of the United States, and continued through Jimmy Carter in 1980. In 1947, the title changed to Foreign Relations of the United States: Diplomatic Papers. Finally, in 1969, the name was shortened to its present form, Foreign Relations of the United States.

The Foreign Relations volumes contain documents from various Presidential libraries, the Departments of State and Defense, the National Security Council, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Agency for International Development, and other foreign affairs agencies as well as the private papers of individuals involved in formulating U.S. foreign policy. Additional resources, including books and comprehensive coverage of Code of Federal Regulations Title 22 (Foreign Relations) are also included.

This collection of important foreign relations materials is an essential tool in understanding the international policies and affairs of previous presidential administrations, government officials and government agencies of the United States.
The official goals of the United States’ foreign policy are described by the U.S. Department of State as being “to create a more secure, democratic, and prosperous world for the benefit of the American people and the international community.” Over the course of time, this approach to foreign relations has been the subject of much debate, criticism and praise both domestically and abroad.

American foreign relations first emerged on the world stage with the “Olive Branch Policy”, an attempt on the part of the newly formed United States to reconcile with Great Britain during the American Revolution. At the conclusion of the war, the new state increased its trade and political relations with various nations abroad, and thus America’s international policy began to take shape.

Numerous defining moments in American foreign relations have occurred in various stages of its diplomatic history. From the Monroe Doctrine in 1823 that proclaimed European powers could no longer colonize or interfere with the affairs of the newly independent nations of the Americas, to the conclusion of World War I which saw the return to “isolationist” policies and the Cold War which focused on “containment”, America quickly became and continues to be a major player in world affairs.

Today, the United States has economic and diplomatic interest in every region of the globe. Only seven nations do not have recognized relationships with the U.S.: Bhutan, Republic of China (Taiwan), Somalia, North Korea, Western Sahara (Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic), Cuba and Iran. Because the United States is one of the largest diplomatic presences of any nation in the world, its foreign relations with other countries will continue to be one of the most critical topics in media and politics around the world.

“America...goes not abroad in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own. She will commend the general cause by the countenance of her voice, and the benignant sympathy of her example.”

- John Quincy Adams, sixth President of the United States

Notable Works Include:

In addition to the expansive Foreign Relations of the United States series, the HeinOnline Foreign Relations of the United States database includes more than 200 related titles.

- American Foreign Policy Current Documents

- United States and Russia: The Beginning of Relations, 1765-1815
  Bashkina, Nina N.; et al., Editors

- Documents on Germany, 1944-1985

- Emerging Nation: A Documentary History of the Foreign Relations of the United States under the Articles of Confederation, 1780-1789
  Giunta, Mary A.; et al., Editors

- American Foreign Policy Basic Documents, 1950-1955

Not Subscribed? Contact your sales representative or email marketing@wshein.com today to request a quote or trial!