HeinOnline Coverage

HeinOnline's Selden Society Publications and the History of Early English Law gives users access to English and American legal history dating back to A.D. 1066 in an online digital format. We have partnered with the Ames Foundation to include early manuscripts, yearbooks and more! In addition to primary publications, researchers will also find some of the most influential digests, abridgments, and modern encyclopedias that formed the foundation of English law, and had enduring effects on the development of law in America.

*Selden Society Annual Series

The Selden Society's principal achievement has been the publication of its annual series, which contains essential source materials of the common law, including law reports dating back to the Middle Ages (known as the Year Books), plea rolls and courts' records, eyre rolls of itinerant justices, select leading cases in the courts of King's Bench, Chancery, Star Chamber, Admiralty, Requests, Exchequer Chamber, and Privy Council; and in local, manorial, ecclesiastical, and mercantile courts. Select charters of trading companies, borough customs, and records of public works show the development of business enterprise and local government. Professional literature, early treatises, formularies, judges' notebooks, and lecturers' readings on statutes show the development of the legal profession, early legal education, the inns of court, and their teaching methods.

The publication of English legal materials is an unfinished project! The Selden Society edits, translates, and publishes one volume each year, which often contains materials appearing for the first time in print. The contents of each volume are explained and discussed in its introduction; and these introductions therefore represent much of the research and scholarship that has been devoted over the past hundred years to the development of the common law and its institutions.

*Selden Society Supplementary Series

The Supplementary Series commenced in 1965 to include shorter works not appropriate for the main volumes. Bibliographies of manuscripts and lists identifying judges and leading lawyers throughout the centuries are just some of the sources found in the Supplementary Series.

Centenary Guide to the Publications of the Selden Society

In 1987, to mark its centennial, the Society published its Centenary Guide. This title gives a full description of all of its publications, including the contents and introductions of every annual volume through volume 102. Publications of the Ames Foundation

From the late thirteenth century to the beginning of the seventeenth century, the Year Books are the most important source for the history of English law. The Year Books of the reign of Richard II from 1377-1399 were never printed, but a number of them survive in manuscript form. The Ames Foundation has printed a modern edition of these manuscripts in edited French text, with the Latin text of the record of the case, followed by the English translation of both the French and Latin. The Foundation also adds significant scholarly introductions, tables, and elaborate indexes to make them a significant resource for early English legal history. In addition to publishing these year books, they have also published Lex Mercatoria, a thirteenth-century treatise; Joseph Henry Beale's Bibliography of Early English Law Books; Robert Bowie Anderson's Supplement to Beale; and the Proceedings Before the Justices of the Peace in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries.

Featured titles included:

Spoils of the Pope and the Pirates, 1357: The Complete Legal Dossier from the Vatican Archives

Over the course of almost 50 years, the editors have pieced together from the vast archive of the Avignonese papacy, 54 documents that tell the story of a shipwrecked pirate ship carrying treasure of the papal Camera at Avignon from the estate of a worldly bishop of Lisbon. These documents are edited in full in Latin, and accompanied by English summaries.

Historical Year Books of Richard II published under the literacy directorship of Charles Donahue Jr.

Lex Mercatoria and Legal Pluralism: A Late Thirteenth-Century Treatise and Its Afterlife, Edited by Mary Elizabeth Basile, Jane Fair Bestor, Daniel R. Coquillette, J. Donald Monan; and Charles Donahue, Jr., 1998

Appeals to the Privy Council from the American Colonies: An Annotated Digital Catalogue

Consisting of a series of 257 reports, this title focuses on all currently known colonial cases appealed to the Privy Council from the future United States.

For each appeal, the report gives:

- The full colony from which the case was appealed
- Full and short name of the appeal as compiled from the entry in the Acts of the Privy Council, Colonial Series (APC)
- The names and dates of lower court actions as given in the APC
- And much more!

Welsh Legal History Society - NEW

The Welsh Legal History Society was founded in 1999, its inaugural lecture being delivered by Professor David Ibbetson in May of that year and the official launch being held at Cardiff in May 2000. Its first volume was published in 2001 and celebrated the foundation of the society by publishing the first collection of its proceedings. Six of the eight papers contained in the volume are based on lectures delivered to the Society by members at the three meetings held during the first fifteen months of the Society's existence. These include the inaugural lecture at Cardiff in May 1999.

The Society exists to spread knowledge of, and promote research into, the rich history of law in Wales. That history extends from a fascinating medieval indigenous legal system to the specific (sometimes surprising) application of law within Wales in more modern times.

They have published a series of works featuring scholarly editions, collections of essays, and monographs across a variety of periods and subjects. The work of lawyers and commentators with Welsh connections is also addressed by the Society. Its historical interests cover both the doctrinal history of the law and the contextual study of the law in the society in which it operates.
