

Scottish Legal History

Featuring Publications of the Stair Society

Nearly 8 centuries of unique legal research material!

STAIR SOCIETY BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Founded in 1934, the Stair Society serves to encourage the study and advance the knowledge of the history of Scots Law by the publication of original documents and by the reprinting and editing of works of sufficient rarity or importance. It is named after Scotland's greatest jurist, James Dalrymple, 1st Viscount Stair, whose Institutions of the Law of Scotland, first published in 1681, were the foundation of modern Scots law.

As part of its aim to further the study of Scots legal history, the Society produces printed and electronic publications, specifically an annual volume along with other occasional publications.

HEINONLINE HAS PARTNERED WITH THE STAIR SOCIETY!

HeinOnline has partnered with the Stair Society to bring the history of Scots Law to the forefront, providing access in an online searchable format that has never been available before. This library contains official publications from the Stair Society including the Stair Society Main (Annual) Series Vols. 1-64 (1936-2017), and the Supplementary Series Vols. 1-3.

In addition to the publications of the Stair Society, researchers will find influential works and links to scholarly articles relating to Scottish Legal History.

HeinOnline Coverage

Stair Society Main (Annual) Series Vols. 1-60 (1936-2013)

When the Stair Society was founded in 1934, material in Scotland for the legal historian was curiously sparse. This is remarkable because there are few countries whose legal inheritance is more varied than that of Scotland. For their first publication in 1935, the Society chose to produce an introductory survey of the sources and literature of Scots Law. This first volume provided the first comprehensive legal-historical bibliography available for the law of Scotland and, by means of short introductory essays, canvassed the sources available.

Selden Society Publications and the History of Early English Law

NEW: Now search across manuscripts, records, cases, plea rolls, and more dating back to A.D. 1200!

HeinOnline has partnered with the Selden Society organization and the Ames Foundation to bring early English manuscripts, yearbooks, and more to the forefront, providing access to early English legal history in an online searchable format that has never been available before!

In addition to primary publications from the Selden Society & the Ames Foundation, researchers will also find some of the most influential digests, abridgments, and modern encyclopedias that formed the foundation of early English law, and had enduring effects on the study of law in America. From Fitzherbert's Abridgment in 1577, to Rolle's Abridgment in 1668, to Coke's Institutes and Coke's Reports from 1679 and 1826, this collection gives researchers a insight into the works of some of the most widely known authors of such material.

The collection contains official publications from the Selden Society including the Selden Society Annual Series Vols. 1-121 (1887-2004), the Supplementary Series Vols. 1-13 (1965-2000), and the Centenary Guide to the Publications of the Selden Society. It also includes the Publications of the Ames Foundation and a number of legal classics, digests, encyclopedias and abridgments.

Access to this rare digital collection includes:

- Links to more than 140 law review articles that discuss the development of early English history and more specifically the Yearbooks which contain the earliest legal precedents of the common law tradition
- Links to law review articles written by famous English & American lawyers, professors, and jurists including: Francis Bacon, F.W. Maitland, Frederick Pollock and more!
- Ability to browse law review articles by title or by author
- More than 200 English Legal History Classics including abridgments, digests, and dictionaries with more to come; will include more than 50 new titles not found elsewhere in HeinOnline!
